WHAT'S CHANGED?

▶▶ GETTING INTO THE ACTIVITY

Can you work out what's missing? Has something been moved? Is there a new item on the table? Put your observation skills to the test with a game of 'What's Changed?'

Set up a table with roughly 15 objects on. Use a good variety of items. Have a bucket of extra items to one side too.

Ask the children to look at the table and try and remember what is on it and where each item is. After a short while, ask the group to face away and then change something. You could remove, move, or add an item to the table. Once ready, ask the children to face the table again and spot what has changed.

Make the game harder by making more than one change each time. Can the group spot multiple changes? You could ask some of the children to make the changes for each round.

Virtual Session: Play a similar game, with a leader showing a table of items. Alternatively, leaders or children could be encouraged to turn their camera off, make a change to their background and then turn the camera back on. Can the rest of the group spot what's changed?
